LONDON, SATURDAY, November 20, 1731. NUMB. LXXXIV.

MR. D'Anvers has confeſs'd at laſt that Liberty itſelf may be abus'd, and Licentiouſneſs impos'd upon the World for Patriotiſm; this was a Conceſſion I little expected from him, becauſe it allow'd all I pleaded for, expect the Application to himſelf, which, in my humble Opinion, is as eaſily demonſtrated as the other, tho' he is ſo unwilling to pronounce a Sentence that would be his inevitable Ruin; but, ſays he, if we would enjoy Liberty, we muſt bear with Licentiouſneſs; for 'tis impoſſible to prevent the Evils which ariſe from the laſt, without reſigning the Bleſſings of the firſt. "The only "Queſtion therefore remaining, CONTINUES HE IN ANO-"THER PLACE, is whether we ought to give up all the great "Advantages of LIBERTY, rather than to ſubmit to ſome "ſmall Inconveniences which naturally attend it."——No Body doubts but, in a Land of Freedom like ours, there will be Numbers of turbulent and ſeditious Perſons, who will take Advantage of the Lenity of the Laws to be a Grievance to their Governors, and make their own ſtubborn unruly Paſſions the Means to make the Publick uneaſy; every one, that is acquainted with the Engliſh Hiſtory of paſt Times, will be as ready to own it, as our Poſterity when they read of the preſent. 'Tis the Curſe of popular Governments to ſee their beſt Labours, for the Happineſs of the People, perverted from their original Intention, and Good and Evil ſpringing up together, as Twins whoſe Being was inſeparable. But, however plain and evident this Misfortune may be, 'tis nevertheleſs a Misfortune, and ſuch common Diſturbers are as guilty notwithſtanding, as if they were the firſt and laſt that ever attempted to become conſiderable by ſuch infamous Means: Nay, the more epidemic the Evil, the more loudly it demands a Cure, and, while Poiſons are permitted to be vended, ſo ſhould the Antidote too; I don't ſee that it excuſes any modern Malecontents, that their Anceſtors were ſo before them, and I think the Rebellion in Lancaſhire was as worthy of Puniſhment, as the Inſurrections of Jack Straw, or Wat Tyler; I don't infer from this that the Secular Arm ſhould be employ'd on any Occaſion but where the Law directs; the Law is undoubtedly the Teſt of all criminal Affairs, and I am not for extending its Power to the Diſadvantage of the Subject on any Account whatever: But 'tis confeſs'd that ſome Evils may ariſe that are not cognizable by Law, and the public Peace may be violated, without leaving the Public any Power to do itſelf Juſtice,——In ſuch Caſes 'tis neceſſary that ſome Methods ſhould be taken to cheque a growing Miſchief, and expoſe, at leaſt, what our Conſtitution will not ſuffer us to chaſtize; Writing, and the Liberty of the Preſs have, of late Years, been the Inſtruments of Diſaffection, and the Tools of Diſloyalty; the Rancour and Malignancy of bad Hearts have been vented that Way, and the whole Force of Artifice has been tried to make it effectual: If it has not bred ill Blood among the People, if it has not ſtirr'd up Commotions, and rent the Nation aſunder, the Faction is not to blame; they have done their utmoſt to effect it, by all the plauſible Arguments, that could influence a mad Multitude into the wildeſt Perſuit of Miſchief.——To this Purpoſe they have been told they have an undoubted Right to call their Governors to an Account for their Behaviour, and puniſh them if they have done amiſs; the moſt barbarous and unjuſt Precedents have been diligently ſearch'd after, and as malicioufly applied, and, when legal Examples have fail'd, Violence, and Outrage, popular Tumults, and Aſſaſſinations have been publickly inforc'd, and obliquely recommended.—— With Regard to the firſt Part of this Conduct, 'tis notorious that the Power of the People to call their Magiſtrates to an Account, is veſted in their legal Repreſentatives, in the Parliament only; and he, or they who undertake, or recommend any other Practice, are guilty of a notorious Breach of the Conſtitution, and, if there is no Law to puniſh it, 'tis open to the Eye of Reaſon, and ought at leaſt to be cenſur'd as it deſerves.——As to the laſt, if 'tis not the moſt aggravated Abuſe of Liberty, if 'tis not a Proof of the moſt abandon'd Licentiouſneſs, I muſt own myſelf an Ignorant both of Right and Wrong, and conſequently unfit to determine either Way.——Even according to Mr. D'Anvers himſelf, theſe are ſome of the ſmall Inconveniences that attend the Liberty of the Preſs: For 'tis ſuch Things that are complain'd of, and no other: Whatever tends to diſconcert the Union between the three Eſtates of the Kingdom, to weaken the Bands of Allegiance from the People to their Prince, to diſcredit the Nation abroad, or embroil it at home, whatever he has made uſe of to public Diſadvantage is number'd among theſe ſmall Inconveniences; and ſurely theſe may very juſtly be complain'd of as a Contempt of the Crown, and an Injury to the People—— But, ſuppoſing them Inconveniences (ſays this venerable Patriot) you can't prevent them, without laying a Reſtraint on the Preſs, and that's the effectual Way to deſtroy Liberty at once: Yes, Sir, they may be prevented without; if Men would lay aſide their Paſſions, and their Prejudices, their Ambition, and Avarice, their Malice, and Revenge; if they would think modeſtly of themſelves, and impartially of others; if they would examine their own Hearts, and make themſelves acquainted with their own Foibles; if they would conſider the profound Regard that is due to Government, and the inviolable Duty of preſerving Peace among the People; if they would make Truth only the End of their Enquiries; and the Happineſs of their Country the ſole Object of their Wiſhes: If they would behave agreeably to theſe Principles, their Oppoſition would be glorious, and all good Men would be their Friends. No one would then complain of Licentiouſneſs, and the Abuſe of Liberty would never be heard of any more; the Preſs would be eſteem'd as the Means of conveying Knowledge and Felicity to Mankind, and would be valued accordingly: Liberty would produce no Inconveniences to complain of, and Patriotiſm no Dangers to public Peace: In ſhort let the Craftſman and his Aſſociates forbear their Inſults to the Legiſlature, and they'll have no Reaſon to apprehend it; as I have before ſaid, while they reaſon upon the Square, without Calumny, or Miſrepreſentation, the Miniſtry will neither ſilence or moleſt them; the preſent Perſons in Power can never be afraid of Truth and Honeſty; but Slander and Malice are Enemies, that Innocence and Virtue itſelf can never be ſecure from.——I am not vain enough to imagine Mr. D'Anvers will take my Advice; Wot you not that by this CRAFT we have our LIVING, ought to be their Motto, and, while the Circumſtance is ſo, I ſhall never expect it: Mens Intereſts have a ſecret Effect on their Reaſonings, and their Actions, and the Behaviour of the Craftſman is the ſtrongeſt Proof imaginable.——If therefore this Evil is intail'd on us, what Methods ſhall be made uſe of to rebate the Point of its Malignancy? not by reſtraining the Preſs; God be prais'd! their Writings are not formidable enough to need it, but by expoſing their Fallacies, their Prevarications, and all the little Tricks of Falſhood that they are remarkable for.——They have receiv'd one Blow already without Doors, that they'll hardly recover in Haſte; and, if the Force of Truth alone, unaſſiſted with Power, or Authority, has ſtagger'd them ſo much, there will be no Reaſon to call in the ſecular Arm to do the reſt.——I love the Conſtitution too well to wiſh, or propoſe any Violence to it, and, whatever Miſchief Mr. D'Anvers may intend, I dare engage it will never take Place, as long as Truth has any Advocates to defend it.——'Tis enough that the Cauſe of Reaſon is tried by Reaſon, we deſire no other Teſt, we plead for nothing elſe; we defend the Conſtitution, as well as the Miniſtry, and oppoſe the Craftſman only becauſe he is an Enemy to both.

To the AUTHOR of the WEEKLY REGISTER.

SIR,

YOU may either put this in your Paper next Week, or light your Pipe with it.——'Twill be all one to

Your humble Servant,

ANONYMOUS.

An APOLOGY for the Gentlemen who voted againſt hearing a Petition for erecting a Statue to King WILLIAM.

THO' Tories never need to ſhew
Reaſons for what they ſay, or do;
Yet, ſince ſo great a Noiſe we have
About a Vote we lately gave:
(Which may, perhaps, at next Election,
Rob us of many a Cit's Affection)
We judge it fit the World ſhould know
For once, why Things were carried ſo;
That all may ſee (who Seeing care for)
For every Why we have a Wherefore.
The Charge againſt us is in ſhort
As follows. We were met in Court,
When B——, hoiſting up his B——h
Made firſt a Bow, and then a Speech.
Here's a Petition, Sirs, quo' he,
From ſeveral Citizens, d'ye ſee?
Who all have ſign'd it; —" Praying, that ye
" Would grant them leave, King WILLIAM's Statue
" (Where ſtood the Conduit of Cheapſide)
" T' erect: —— the Money they'll provide."
Perhaps you may not grant this Favour ——
But hear their Paper read, however.
The Queſtion then was put, and lo!
The Fabrick ſhook with No! no! no!
What leſs cou'd you expect from True-Hearts,
Who ev'n adore the Race of STUARTS?
WILLIAM, we grant, was very civil,
And JAMES with us had play'd the Devil.
Now ſome conclude from hence, it ſeems,
That WILLIAM merits more than JAMES.
Lord! can Men be ſo ſhallow-pated?
Where were theſe Creatures educated,
Who know not yet wherein a Tory
Places a Monarch's greateſt Glory?
Are we not proud, to lead the Lives
Of Spaniel Dogs, and Spaniſh Wives?
Don't we take drubbing for Affection,
And bleſs the Hand that gives Correction?
And don't we think we're treated hard,
If not of LIBERTY debar'd?
To ſeize on Right, and Ruin bring,
Is acting ſomething like a King!
And thus (as Hiſtories report all)
The S——s made their Names immortal.
For which Diſplay of boundleſs Power,
That Name with Reverence we adore;
And Monuments to them erect,
As Tokens of profound Reſpect.
But WILLIAM never thus behav'd!
Three Kingdoms he from Ruin ſav'd!
And after this can Leave b'expected,
That WILLIAM's Statue may b'erected?
We nothing from good Princes dread,
But Prudence bids us fear the bad.
So th' Indians as ſome Author ſaith,
(Who hold the Manichean Faith
Of one Good Spirit, and one Evil)
Pay all their Worſhip to the Devil.

Criticiſms on Dramatic Writings from various Authors.

SOliloquies are become mighty common Things on the modern Stage; yet can nothing be more inartificial or more unnatural, than an Actor's making long Speeches to himſelf to convey his Intentions, &c. to the Audience. Where ſuch Diſcoveries are to be made, the Poet ſhould rather take Care to give the Dramatick Perſons ſuch Confidants, as may neceſſarily ſhare their inmoſt Thoughts; by which Means they will be more naturally convey'd to the Audience. Yet is even this a Shift, an accurate Poet would not be found to have Occaſion for. The Uſe and Abuſe of Soliloquies, is well deliver'd by the Duke of Buckingham in the following Lines:

Soliloquies had need be very few,
Extremely ſhort, and ſpoke in Paſſion too.
Our Lovers talking to themſelves, for Want
Of others, make the Pit their Confidant;
Nor is the Matter mended yet, if thus
They traſt a Friend, only to tell it us.

Cataſtrophe. The Qualifications of this Change are, that it be probable and neceſſary: In order to be probable 'tis requir'd, it be the natural Reſult, or Effect of the foregoing Actions, i. e. it muſt ſpring from the Subject itſelf, or take its Riſe from the Incidents, and not be introduc'd merely to ſerve a Turn. The Diſcovery in the Cataſtrophe, muſt have the ſame Qualifications as the Cataſtrophe itſelf, whereof 'tis a principal Part. It muſt be both probable and neceſſary. To be probable, it muſt ſpring out of the Subject itſelf, not effected by Means of Marks, &c. To be neceſſary, it muſt never leave the Perſons it concerns in the ſame Sentiments they had before, but ſtill produce either Love or Hatred, &c. Sometimes the Change conſiſts in the Diſcovery; ſometimes it follows at a Diſtance, and ſometimes reſults immediately from it, which is the moſt beautiful Kind: And thus it is in OEdipus.

Mr. Dryden thinks a Cataſtrophe reſulting from a mere Change in the Sentiments and Reſolutions of a Perſon, without any further Machinery, may be ſo manag'd as to become exceeding beautiful, nay preferable to any other. One of the fineſt Diſcoveries ever brought upon the Stage is that of OEdipus in Sophocles; for the Minute he finds himſelf the Son of that Jocaſta, who was then his Wife, he becomes of the moſt happy, the moſt miſerable of all Men. The Peripetia is ſometimes induc'd by Remembrance or Diſcovery, where the Meſſenger ſent from C- rinth to invite OEdipus to the Crown, informs him that Polybus and Merope were not his Father and Mother; which begins a Diſcovery, that Laius, whom he had kill'd, and Jocaſta whom he had then to Wife, were his Father and his Mother, and throws him into the deepeſt Diſtreſs. The Knot ought always to laſt to the Middle of the fifth Act, otherwiſe the reſt of the Piece becomes feeble and languiſhing.

In the Interval between the Acts, the Theatre remains empty, and without any Action viſible to the Spectators; tho' 'tis ſuppos'd all the while there is one paſſing out of Sight. 'Tis not however, purely for the Sake of the Reſpite, that theſe Acts are obſerv'd; but to give Affairs a greater Degree of Probability, and render the Intrigue more affecting. For, the Spectator who ſees the Action prepar'd that is to paſs in the Interval, cannot forbear acting in his Imagination, the Part of the abſent Actors; by which Means, he is the more agreeably ſurpriz'd, when a new Act coming upon the Stage, he ſees the Effects of that Action, which before he could but gueſs at. To this it may be added, that Authors contrive to have the moſt dry and difficult Parts of the Drama tranſacted between the Acts; that the Spectators may have no Notion of theſe, excepting what their Fancy preſents them with at a Diſtance; and that nothing may appear upon the Stage, but what is natural, probable, and entertaining. —The firſt Act is to propoſe the Matter or Argument of the Fable, and to ſhew the principal Characters.——The ſecond to bring the Affair or Buſineſs upon the Carpet.——The third to furniſh Obſtacles and Difficulties.——The fourth either points a Remedy for thoſe Difficulties, or finds new in the Attempt.——The fifth puts an End to all by a Diſcovery.

On our Stage, the Scene is properly, the Perſons preſent to, or concern'd in the Act, on the Stage at ſuch a Time. Whenever, therefore, a new Actor appears, or an old one diſappears, the Action is chang'd into other Hands, and there a new Scene then commences. 'Tis one of the Laws of the Stage, that the Scenes be well connected; that is, that one ſucceed another in ſuch Manner, as that the Scene is never quite empty till the End of the Act. Probability; Example. A Man may probably die of an Appoplexy, but that this ſhould happen juſt in the Nick, when the Poet wanted it for an Unravelling, is highly improbable. 'Tis an Offence againſt Probability to produce an Incident all at once, and without any Preparation which yet needed one. The Knot, or Intrigue of a dramatick Piece is that Part where the Perſons are the moſt embaraſs'd; by a Conjuncture of Affairs, whoſe End it is not eaſy to foreſee. Ariſtotle under this Term includes all the Incidents of a Tragedy from its Beginning to the Place where it begins to unravel. The Knot holds as long as the Mind is kept ſuſpended on the Event. In a Tragedy, Comedy, or Epick Poem, there are always two Deſigns; the firſt and principal is that of the Hero of the Piece; the ſecond contains the Deſigns of all thoſe who oppoſe him. Theſe oppoſite Cauſes produce oppoſite Effects, to wit, the Efforts of the Hero for the Execution of his Deſign, and the Efforts of thoſe who thwart it. As thoſe Cauſes or Deſigns are the Beginning of the Action, ſo thoſe Efforts are the Middle, and form a Knot, or Difficulty, which we call an Intrigue, that makes the greateſt Part of a Poem. It laſts as long as the Mind of the Reader or Hearer is ſuſpended about the Event of thoſe oppoſite Efforts; the Solution, or Cataſtrophe commences when the Knot begins to unravel, and the Difficulties, and Doubts begin to clear up.

An Example on the Price of Gold, as publiſh'd in Collett's Courſe of Exchange.

A Merchant bought 207 Ounces, 13 Pennyweights, 16 Grains ½ of Standard Gold at L. 3:18 per Ounce, which amount to L. 809:19:04 ½ Sterling. This Quantity of Standard Gold reduced makes 24 Marks, 0 Carrats, 6 Grains, 10 Parts ½ of Fine Gold, which ſold (according to the Price of Fine Gold in the Amſterdam Slip of November 12, 1731. N. S.) at Guilders 335 Banco per Mark Fine, advance 4 ½ per Cent, yields Guilders 8911:14:1 Banco. And this Sum return'd by Exchange from Amſterdam to London at 34:6 brings in

Sterling Money	L. 861:00:08
The Coſt of the Gold was	L. 809:19:04 ½
The Gain	L. 51:01:03 ½

Now if 207 oz: 13 dwts: 16 grs. ½ yield L. 861:00:08 What does one Ounce yield?

Anſwer, L. 4:02:11. Some ſmall Matter more per oz. as per Collett's Courſe of Exchange of Tueſday laſt.

N. B. In our Next will be inſerted a Table for turning Standard Gold into Fine Gold.

We have an Account from Durham, that the Pitmen have roſe againſt the Coal-Owners in thoſe Parts, upon ſome Diſagreement between them; and that the Damage they have done to the Gentlemen upon the River Weare was very conſiderable: They forced themſelves into the Houſe of one Anderſon, an Overſeer to Mr. Allen, and after they had eat and drank as long as they could, they ſtaved all the Veſſels that were in the Cellar, deſtroy'd moſt of the Houſhold Goods, and then untiled the Houſe, which was with much Difficulty preſerv'd from being burnt.

Letters from Jamaica of the 15th of Sept. laſt, by the Way of Briſtol, mention that a Duel had been fought there between Col. Caggill, and Col. Beckford, and that the latter was ſhot dead on the Spot.

Robberies, &c. Laſt Tueſday two Men ſtopt ſeveral Perſons on Horſeback two Miles on this Side Graveſend, and having diſmounted them, cut their Girts and Bridles; there came by an Exciſeman, whom they ſerved in the ſame Manner, but took nothing from them; afterwards a Waggon coming by, they robb'd it of two Pieces of Silk, and then went off, ſaying, they waited for a certain Jew, worth ſtopping.——Two Perſons have been lately committed to the Caſtle of York, the one an Innkeeper of that City, and the other a Brewer of Doncaſter, for robbing the Lady Morley, and a noted Farmer; they had both been Servants to the ſaid Lady, correſponded with one another, and had each of them ſued the County for Money they pretended to be robb'd of; they afterwards robb'd the ſaid Lady's Houſe of Plate, and a Purſe of ſixty Guineas: The Farmer, the next Morning after he was robb'd, found a Letter directed to the Brewer, by which Means they took him up, and he has confeſs'd the Facts as above.

FOREIGN NEWS.

HAGUE, Nov. 20. Our Letters from Paris assure us, that that Court is vastly out of Humour, at the Resolution of the Court of Turin to take into their Service a Body of Imperial Troops, preferably to those of France, which were offered on the Part of his most Christian Majesty. The French Ministers could not forbear expressing their Uneasiness upon this Account to the Ministers of Sardinia. It seems more likely than ever, that there will be Broils between those two Courts, to which the King of Sardinia's Inclination to accede to the Treaty of Vienna will not a little contribute. The same cannot be said with Regard to the Dispositions between the Courts of France and Portugal; the latter, as we are inform'd, yielding to the Sollicitation of the former, not to enter into any Engagements with the Allies of Vienna, whatever Instances they may make. It is in vain to say, the Corsicans are a Parcel of Rebels; that they are Savages, Beggars, and all that is naught; it is nevertheless certain, that those poor Wretches fight pro aris & focis, for all that is dear to Mankind; and that they can prove that the Republick of Genoa has used them more like Slaves than Subjects; or at least, that the Governors who have been sent to them, have oppressed them with Taxes. Those Malecontents have at present the better of the Republick; and are undoubtedly supported by certain Nations, whose Interest it is, always to keep a Door open, by that Island, to go to Naples or Sicily when they please; those Nations accounting it an Eye-sore to see the said Kingdoms in the Hands of the Emperor. The Prince of Orange, who has been here these eight Days, has still a very numerous Court, and is greatly beloved. Among other fine Actions, which have shone out in that young Prince since he came of Age, they give us the two that follow: A Company being vacant, and in his Highness's Disposal, several Lords of Friesland made Application to him in Behalf of their Sons or their Friends. The Prince answered them, that he was sorry he could not gratify them, but that he had already disposed of it: At the same Time, he sent for an old French Lieutenant, who had been 30 Years in that Station, and could get no higher, for Want of Money or Friends: Being brought into his Highness's Presence, the Prince said to him, with the gracious Manner that is so natural to him, I make you a Present of that Company; and it is an unspeakable Pleasure to me, to enter upon the Exercise of my Power, by rewarding an old Officer, who has merited so well by his Services. After this, his Highness sent for an old Serjeant, who had likewise been 30 Years in the Service, and gave him an Ensign's Commission; and being inform'd that the poor Fellow had no Money to equip himself with a Horse and Accoutrements, the Prince generously gave it him out of his own Pocket.

Some News-Writers have asserted, without any good Ground, that as soon as the Infant Don Carlos is declared at Age, he is to marry the Archduchess Maria Teresa, the Emperor's eldest Daughter; but it is not likely that that young Prince will ever be put in so fair a Way to ascend the Imperial Throne, who by that Alliance would enter upon the immediate Possession of the Kingdoms of Bohemia and Hungary, the two Sicilies, the Duchies of Milan and Mantua, the Austrian Netherlands, and several other Sovereignties. The other Powers of Europe are too much interested to prevent the House of Bourbon's growing so powerful. And what would become of our Republick, if that should happen? Might it not be over-run in one Campagne? Doubtless Spain would in that Case have another Stroke for recovering the Seven Provinces of the Netherlands, which have shaken off our Yoke. England might not be able to hinder it; and the King of Prussia's Friendship is not now so great perhaps, that we could rely upon his Assistance. In short, if that Marriage were to take Place, the Pragmatick Sanction being accepted by all the Powers of Europe, or even by the greatest Part of them, as it certainly will, the House of Bourbon would be in a Condition to prescribe Laws to other Sovereigns, without receiving any in Return.
